Violent Local Conflicts
How to develop and maintain Peace

There are countless violent conflicts at local and regional levels around the world. The causes are mainly to be found at the economic, social or political level and are often interlinked.

Sustainable development can only take place if peace prevails. Crisis management and viable conflict resolution and reconciliation are therefore fundamental prerequisites for peace.

In many cases, power interests are the cause of conflicts and sustain them. In addition to addressing the causes of conflict and finding solutions at the structural and power levels, it is important to build state as well as civil society structures and capacities that contribute to nonviolent conflict resolution. Tools and capabilities to recognize escalating conflicts in time and to intervene at an early stage are important. Civil crisis prevention and peacebuilding are central elements of peacebuilding.

Through peace education, young people can learn how to settle disputes peacefully. Civil society, as well as local government mediators who work to overcome conflicts through mediation, can contribute to political and social understanding and promote cohesion at the local level.

In this seminar, we will address both the causes of violent local conflicts and solutions. We will get to know methods of peace education and non-violent conflict resolution and look at the work of peace mediators. We will work mainly in groups and interactive exercises.

You are sincerely welcome!
